

RUN DOWN BY A STEAMSHIP.

The Tug Glen Island sent to the bottom of the Bay with two of her crew.

The tug Glen Island, Capt. William H. Foote, left New York at 6 o'clock yesterday morning for the shipyard below Stapleton, Staten Island, to bring up the sidewheel steamer Christensen. As the tug was passing Bobbin's Reef, where the flash light is located, George Eisman, the fireman, came upon deck from the stokehole. Looking around, he saw the big Cunard steamer Cephalonia coming right astern.

He stepped inside the house again and told Engineer Charles E. Feely to "throw her wide open," for a steamer was right on them. The engine did not. At the same time Capt. Foote threw his coat over, in the name of clearing the ship, but it was too late. The fireman now touched the tug on the starboard quarter, throwing her around and rolling her over. The tug filled and sank instantly, carrying every one of her crew of five down with her. The boat had nearly over turned, but Captain Foote had time to jump ashore. The fireman Eisman, and the cook came to the surface.

Not very far away was the tug Henry Davis, which had been sent to the scene of the collision, and immediately came to the rescue of the three men. Engineers Feely and Deckerman Green were drawn up. The body of the engineer was recovered, but Green's did not rise.

The Cephalonia came to a stop, and the property had been pawned, and a detective went after it. They met no policeman, and so Mrs. Bull escorted her prisoner to the station house.

"She bore," said Mrs. Bull, severely to the girl, "if you tell me what you have done with all the things I have stolen from me I will not make complaint against you."

Then the woman broke down and told where the property had been pawned, and a detective went after it.

Capt. Foote said he saw the Cephalonia when he was a long way off, but had no idea that she was so near until he saw right on him.

The engineer was a pensioner, and by the collision, Engineer Feely had been in the Glen Island four years.

He was 45 years of age, and had one child. They live at Greenwich street.

Henry Green, the deck hand who was lost, came from the western part of the State, where he had been engaged in the lake traffic in summer. He was 27 years old.

The Cephalonia was in charge of Pilot D. V. Green, New York pilot. He says the Glen Island pilot was responsible for the safety of the steamer from port to starboard, and then back again. He said that when his way was clear he would go to the starboard side from port to starboard again. He at once ordered the engines reversed, but it was too late.

Capt. Foote thought the Glen Island four years. Not so long ago he was a deck hand, and was about 80 feet long, and 18 feet beam. She was valued at $15,000, and was insured, Capt. Foote had been on the waters of New York for forty years.

EX-MAYOR BEBOVINE'S PRISON LIFE.

Locked Up Because he Cannot Pay $100,000

—Is In Justice?

On a hill in sight of the Long Island City Prison is a large white house, surrounded by farm land. It is known as the Bebovine home, and was the residence of many generations of the Bebovine family, which has been prominent in Long Island for over a century.

A fine-looking man, with a brown beard and strongly built features, sometimes looks toward the windows of the prison.

He is Henry S. Bebovine, the ex-Mayor of Long Island City, who is confined there, and who will remain there his friends say, until he restores to the city $100,700 which he was found guilty of misappropriating. He is said to be poor, and has no means of support except by holding his release. He is held as a judgment debtor against the city. His friends say that under an act passed in Gov. Thiden's administration, he can be held only for the amount of the Bankrupt law to obtain his release, and that unless some special law is passed in his behalf he must remain a private citizen.

Mrs. Bebovine and their three children, until a few months ago lived in a room, and made daily visits to her husband. At present they are separated.

"It seems strange that a man can be imprisoned for life for debt," a Queen's county lawyer said, "but this is undoubtedly an instance of the law being applied to a man who can appropriate the $100,000."

The monitory in Jefferson Market Police Court was relieved yesterday afternoon by a marriage ceremony, performed by Justice Patterson. The bride was Miss Mary Ellen Ruhle.

She wanted to go to Vinaland for the wedding, but her parents advised her to seek a house there instead. He consented, and took Mrs. Bebovine with him. He remembered introducing her to his wife, Mrs. Ewell, "I answered," and she has kissed me just the same as Mr. Ewell kissed my wife and myself, but always with a smile on her face."

He denied that he represented in Vinaland that Mrs. Ewell was his wife. Mrs. Ewell wanted to go to Vinaland for the wedding, but her parents advised her to seek a house there instead.
